The screenshot shows a New York Times article titled "Democrats Hand Victory to Obama on Iran Nuclear Deal" by Jennifer Steinhauer, dated September 10, 2015. The article is categorized under "POLITICS". The main text discusses how Senate Democrats blocked a Republican resolution to reject a six-nation nuclear accord with Iran, ensuring the deal's effectiveness without a veto showdown. It also mentions a procedural vote falling short of the 60 needed to break a Democratic filibuster. The article is accompanied by a photo of Stephen Crowley.

On the right side, there is a comments section titled "673 COMMENTS". It includes a search bar and filters for "All 673", "Readers' Picks 471", and "NYT Picks 5". Two comments are visible:

- Prof.Jai Prakash Sharma (Jaipur, India, 1 hour ago): "However this partisan victory by Obama on the Iran nuclear deal is turned into an issue for electoral exploitation in the coming presidential elections, it represents a major triumph of diplomacy, constructive international effort for peace, and a bold move by Obama to so redefine US engagement in the Middle East as to allow the former to be at the right side of history, hitherto prevented by some of the privileged allies of the US in the region." (12 Recommendations)
- Liji (Nyc, 1 hour ago): "I think 'most fair minded' people have come to conclude that Republicans have been opposing every important steps this President has taken not based on reason but hatred" (27 Recommendations)

Below these, a comment from Principia (St. Louis, 1 hour ago) is partially visible, discussing right-wing, pro-war voters and media's role in turning Iran into a political caricature.

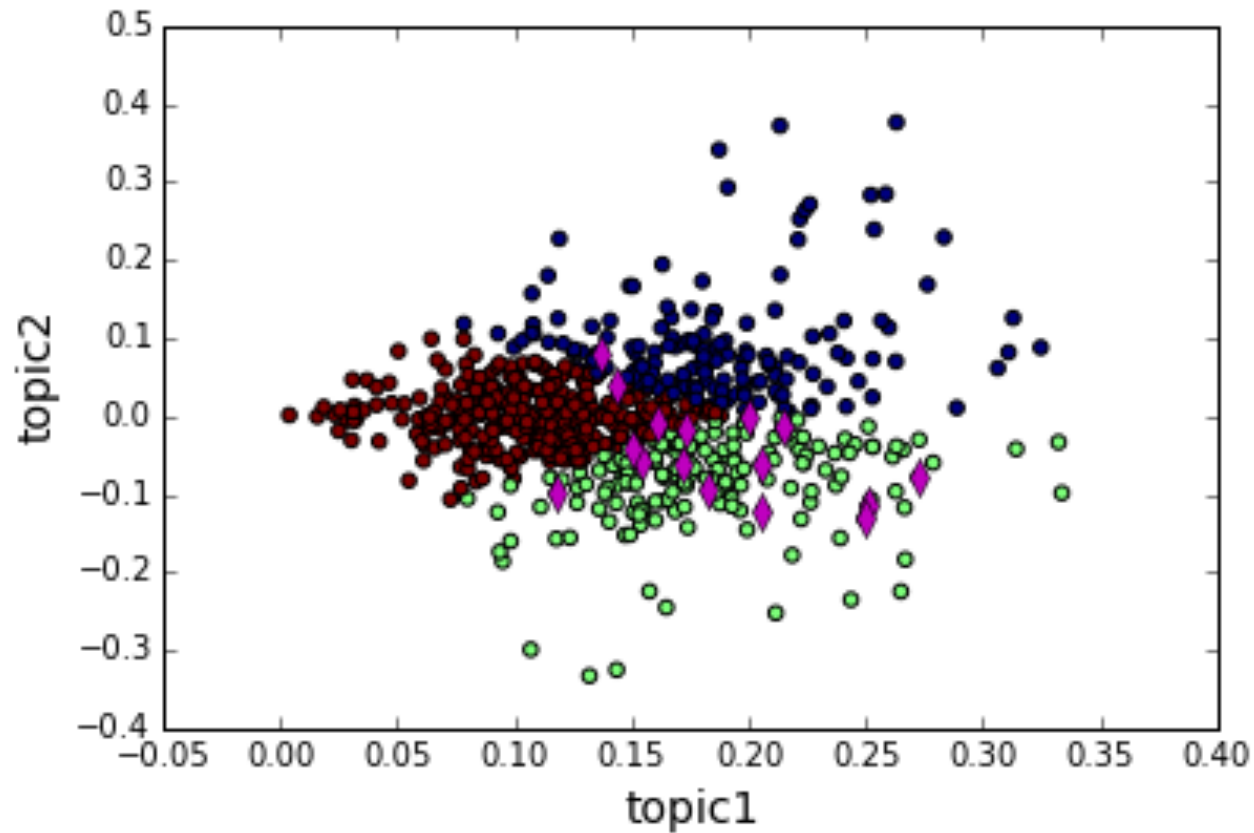

- Comments on the NYT articles have diverse viewpoints.
- Can I curate the comments to get the representative set that cover the entire spectrum?
